What are you looking for?

In addition to having the requisite technical experience, we want candidates who are truly proactive, strong team members. [They should be] highly adaptable to change and have a high amount of intellectual curiosity.

Any secrets to impressing your recruiter?

Have a positive and enthusiastic attitude, be passionate about what you do, and describe specific experiences and results you've achieved [as well as] what you want to achieve. --Interview with Lee Kittay, communications and marketing, Americas

 I am looking for a job as well. 22 yrs as both a territory manager and outside sales experience. No degree. But what I have gained in experience they do not sell or teach in books.

 Absolutely incredible. Looked through the top 22 and no manufacturing jobs. That leaves the likes of Mechanical Engineers, Project Managers, and more importantly skilled assembly labor out in the cold. It would be nice to have our politicians drive manufacturing home with the $US on a decline. Tangible product Made In The USA would be a nice thing to get back to.

 Jason, many of my Recruiter friends are telling me that the flood-gates for jobs are about to open and that there will be a scramble for high quality talent. At this point one can only hope that this is the case. Check out www.jobsdirectusa.com

 87,000 Jobs available and over 482,000 lost which are only the figure from those who are eligible for unemployment compensation not from the additional underemployed which amounts to another 150,000 per month.
